valid, the lex domicilii may refuse to impose thereon the resulting status of marriage. Hall v. Industrial Commission, 165 Wis. 364, 162 N. W. 312; Brook v. Brook, 9 H. of L. Cas. 193. See 26 HARV. L. REV. 538. Construing the statute in the principal case as a limitation upon the decree of divorce, the original marriage was not completely dissolved until the specified time had elapsed. Accordingly, although the marriage contract was valid by the lex loci, the lex domicilii could not impose thereon the marriage status. Warter v. Warter, 15 P. D. 152. Cf. Hooper v. Hooper, 67 Ore. 191, 135 Pac. 525. The Washington decisions, however, construe the statute as applying only to persons who remain domiciled in the state, so that either party could remarry during the prohibited period by acquiring a new domicile. State v. Fenn, 47 Wash. 561, 92 Pac. 417; Pierce v. Pierce, 58 Wash. 622, 109 Pac. 45. As to property acquired after marriage by the husband or wife, or both, Washington, following the civil-law doctrine, considers such to be community property. See 1915, REM. CODE, 2155, § 5917. Even where the marriage is annulled, yet if the parties in good faith believed they were married, as in the principal case, the community doctrine permits the acquests to be divided equally between the man and woman. Lawson v. Lawson, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 43, 69 S. W. 246; In re Brenchley's Estate, 96 Wash. 223, 164 Pac. 913. It is unfortunate, however, to call this property "partnership" property, for that term implies not a marital relation but a business relation entered into for profit. See LINDLEY, PARTNERSHIP, 6 ed., 3, 10; BALLINGER, COMMUNITY PROPERTY, §§ 15, 16.

FEDERAL COURTS — DIVERSITY OF CITIZENSHIP — DOMICILE AS THE EQUIVALENT OF STATE CITIZENSHIP. — The plaintiff, a citizen of the United States, had acquired a domicile in California. He left that state never intending to return, and toured the United States. In the course of his travels he came temporarily to Virginia. He there sued the defendant in a federal court, claiming citizenship in California. Held, that the bill be dismissed for want of jurisdiction. Pannill v. Roanoke Times Co., 252 Fed. 910 (Dist. Ct.).

To sue in a federal court the plaintiff must be a citizen of some state. New Orleans v. Winter, 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 91. A citizen of the United States is a citizen of the state wherein he resides. U. S. CONST., Art. XIV, § 1. But the residence must be animo manendi. Marks v. Marks, 75 Fed. 321; Hammerstein v. Lyne, 200 Fed. 165. As in the principal case a person may thus be a citizen of the United States and not a citizen of any particular state. Hough v. Société Elec. Westinghouse de Russie, 231 Fed. 341. See Slaughter House Cases, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 36, 74. This fact is also illustrated by the status of citizens of territories and of the District of Columbia. Hepburn v. Ellzey, 2 Cranch (U. S.) 452; New Orleans v. Winter, supra. The courts requiring a residence animo manendi for citizenship also say domicile in a state is the substantial equivalent of citizenship in that state. See Harding v. Standard Oil Co., 182 Fed. 421, 423; Hammerstein v. Lyne, 200 Fed. 165, 170. Now one's last domicile remains until a new one is acquired. Desmare v. United States, 93 U. S. 605. It might seem to follow that one remains a citizen of the state of his domicile even when he leaves it sans animum revertendi, so long as he has not acquired a new domicile. But the court in the present case correctly sees that such a result would be utterly inconsistent with the settled view that state citizenship requires permanent residence.

GARNISHMENT — EFFECT OF GARNISHMENT — VALIDITY OF JUDGMENT AGAINST GARNISHEE WHEN PRINCIPAL DEFENDANT IS GIVEN NO NOTICE. — In an action in Tennessee to recover wages, the defendant proved as a defense a judgment obtained against it as garnishee in a proceeding in Virginia. In the garnishment proceeding no service, actual or constructive, was made on
